

WHO KNOWS THIS ISLAND PRINCESS

An English paper published in Germany has the following of local interest:

Central-Theater. Two interesting performances will be given at this theater on Monday and Tuesday evening next, January 30 and 31: The Hawaiian Princess Raya Hamilton will appear with her German company; the love tragedy Athara, in 3 acts, by Robert Talwey, in which the Princess plays the title-role in the German language, will be given.

Central-Theater. January 30. Athara, Love Tragedy, in 3 acts, by Robert Talwey. Eugene Dagullon (Athara); the Hawaiian Princess Raya Hamilton. Director Rotter has been at great pains to provide genuine attractions for his audience this season. Duse, Bernhardt, Duncan, etc., have been the delight of thousands, and have reflected honor on the man who placed his theater at their disposal. But there is no rule without an exception, and Raya Hamilton proved a very decided exception. What could have induced her to enter the profession, and in what hour did Talwey determine to try his hand at writing a drama, are questions difficult to answer. His attempts at writing, and her acting are pretty well on a par. At a masked ball in Paris Marquis Gaston de Maneville meets and falls in love with a young Nubian lady; as Athara is closely masked Gaston does not know or even suspect her nationality; they marry and spend the honeymoon in Nubia. On their return the young couple take up their abode in Normandy, and are visited by Manon de Marsonne, Athara's dearest friend. Nubia, and his wife's relations, do not seem to have impressed the noble Marquis, and he begins to be less attentive to his wife; when Manon appears on the scene she and Gaston promptly fall in love, and the Nubian just as promptly takes poison. The 3 acts are not long, but in each of them one at least of the characters makes a long and very tiresome speech. A remarkable drama! Raya Hamilton would seem to have adopted the profession rather late in life, at any rate she has not yet acquired the rudiments of acting: her gait, gestures, and inability to express joy, grief, or pain, remind one every moment of the novice in the art. In the first scene Athara is at a fashionable mask ball. Raya Hamilton appears in a domino which has once seen better days, a hideous mask, cotton gloves and thick boots. She played the part in German, a language with which she is evidently unacquainted: an impossible pronunciation, grave grammatical blunders, direct translations of English idioms were not the exception but the rule. And all this before a German audience in a German city! The effect of this remarkable language, particularly in the serious scenes, was often so ludicrous that the audience could not refrain from laughing. We must express our admiration for Herr John for the manner in which he acquitted himself of the difficult task of playing the Marquis to Raya Hamilton's Athara. Praise-worthy were also Fraulein Rosen (Manon) and Herr Putz. The drama was well and carefully staged by Herr Witte-Wild of the Berlin Lessing-Theater.—P.
